All Too Human: Bacon, Freud and a Century of Painting Life

A large-scale painting by Francis Bacon of his friend and artistic rival Lucian Freud is part of Tate Britain's landmark exhibition, All Too Human, which begins in February 2018. The work, not exhibited for over half a century, is one of 100 pieces by some of the most celebrated modern British artists. With a focus on Freud and Bacon, the exhibition reveals how their art captures ...

All Too Human: Bacon, Freud and a Century of Painting Life ...

All Too Human takes as its point of departure the early 20th-century nudes of Walter Sickert RA, whose uningratiating tastelessness seems extraordinary for its time. One of the reasons Bacon and Freud failed to reach a wider audience in Britain in the 1960s and 1970s was that even then their work was seen by many as being in bad taste.

All Too Human: Bacon, Freud and a Century of Painting Life

As images of loneliness and pain they outmuscle even Bacon's grief-infused Triptych 1974-77, in which he tries to work out his feelings about the suicide of his lover George Dyer. Where Bacon worked best at one remove from his subject, using photographs as inspiration and compositional tools, Freud needed endless hours in front of the live model.
